THE CARNIVAL.

Carnival week is with us. The city is in gala attire and every one on the quiver for it. That it will be a grand success is beyond question of a doubt. The members of the committee have done some most excellent work in all lines. They have been tireless and resourceful, pleasant and energetic in all their work and are deserving of the greatest of success.

In every particular the fair will be all that has been promised for it. It will be clean cut, entertaining and instructive. The displays of the local merchants will be a revelation. The past few days have been busy ones with them, the preparations amounting to no small task.

It only remains, now, for the citizens in general to make the festivities a success; to show their appreciation of the efforts to give our city a fair that will please the most exacting.

Let everyone lend assistance in every possible way. Let it be said that our carnival was the best, by far, in the entire south. It can and should be made so.

THE PERFECT MAN.

A minister of the gospel once wrote to Lady Maitland, who did not long since in London, inquiring the character of her butler who had applied to her for a situation. "Was Jones honest, reliable, economical, good tempered, obliging and industrious?" To this Lady Maitland replied briefly and promptly: "My Dear Sir—Had my butler all the qualities you name, I should have married him long ago."

It is a fact little known that apart from royalty only four women have been honored by statues in the United Kingdom. One of these, standing at Paddington Green, is a memorial of Sarah Siddons. Another, on the bridge at Walsall, is to the memory of Miss D. W. Pattison, affectionately known to the masses for the sacrifice she made in ministering to their ailing.

"Sister Dora." A third statue at Inverness, on Castle Hill, stands as a tribute to Flora MacDonald, the Jacobite heroine who assisted Prince Charles Edward, after the disaster at Culloden, to escape to Skye. The last statue is to the memory of "Highland Mary," who will at once be remembered by all admirers of the Scottish poet for her romantic connection with Robert Burns.—Exchange.

THAT BRUTAL MAN.

"What is meant by the expression, 'generally speaking'?"

"A woman, I suppose."—Commercial Appeal.

MATTER-OF-FACT MAXIMS.

High art in lying—the trick to do, You almost think yourself the lie is true.

IN THE REALM OF RELIGIOUS WORK.

New Orleans is the scene of another big church gathering. The great Missionary Conference of the Southern Methodist church, which has been a most wonderful success, closed there on April 30, and on May 7 the Southern Baptist Association convenes there. This is one of the largest and most important meetings of this great church and is always largely attended by both the clerical and lay forces. There are, also, representatives from the Woman's Missionary societies in attendance.

Rev. G. W. Perryman, of the First Baptist church, went from here. Also, Mrs. A. D. Rollison. There is a large representation from Kentucky there.

Bishop C. B. Galloway, of Mississippi, who has several times preached at the Broadway Methodist church here, received a most gratifying ovation and tribute to his famed eloquence during the recent Missionary conference in New Orleans. The night of his splendid address $25,000 was raised for missions without him mentioning money. All over the house people were giving by the hundreds and thousands. One man rose and said he wanted to give $5 for every year of his life as a thank-offering for having heard that address. It was a most spontaneous and thrilling scene.

The American Bible society has issued circular letters requesting the co-operation of all interested in the spreading of the Christian faith. Some notable facts are set down therein. The society has circulated 67,000,000 volumes of scripture and in 100 languages. The extent and variety of this work is illustrated by the fact that in 1899 the society issued 11,406 volumes, 241,186 Arabic, 32,863, Japanese 66,000, Spanish 91,305, Chinese 514,255. Appropriations already made for the current year for the foreign work alone amount to $102,250.

Though so essential as to be unquestioned, the society's quiet and far-reaching work is easily overlooked in the louder calls for strictly denominational objects.

Strictly denominational objects, however, are not the kind of thing that those who wish to invest in it as large a share of their benevolence as it deserves. One dollar can provide six bibles or twenty testaments for those who will not have them without your help. A subscriber of $50 may become a life member and of $150 a life director of the American Bible society, New York city. Announcement is made of the completion of negotiations, which have been in progress for some weeks, for the combination of Centre College, at Danville, and Central University, at Richmond, Ky. Centre College is an old institution, in the hands of the Presbyterians of Kentucky, who are in connection with the Northern Presbyterian assembly. Central University is a flourishing institution with a number of associated academies and schools, which was founded and is sustained by the Southern Presbyterians of that state. Rev. W. C. Roberts is the president of Centre College, and Rev. Dr. L. H. Blanton is the chancellor of Central University. These gentlemen have had the counsel of well-known legal advisers, and have with other representatives of the colleges had several conferences, and have reached, it seems, an unanimous and satisfactory scheme of union.

A declaration of the Catholic position on education in the United States was adopted at the closing session of the National Conference of the Association of Catholic colleges in Chicago. The declaration adopted was as follows: "That this Association of Catholic colleges request its president, Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Conaty, respectfully to call the attention of the bishops of the United States, at their annual meeting, to the work of this conference in regard to our collegiate conditions, and especially to the importance of the high school movement; that the tendency of educational legislation forces us to warn our Catholic people of the systematic and well-defined effort in certain quarters toward absolute state control in education, thereby threatening and crippling all private educational effort; thus depriving a large class of the citizens of the liberty of maintaining schools in which their religion shall be made an essential element; that we remind legislators of the rights of conscience guaranteed to us by our American citizenship and call their attention to the system of schools which our people have maintained at great expense and sacrifice; that we protest against the unfair and unjust discriminations resulting from much of the educational legislation, and we appeal to the fair-mindedness and sense of justice of the American people to protect us from such illiberality."

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MIRTH.

Hamilton Mabie, the associate editor of The Outlook, says, "One can never lose the capacity for play without some sacrifice of the capacity for work," which is but the scholar's version of the homely adage, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." Every one is brightened and helped by a little nonsense now and then; you come out of it rested and strengthened for the "up and at it" again; with the forces you are constantly called to meet in the day's work. The stress of the conflict would, indeed, be beyond endurance if there were no break in the continuity of it. The capacity for enjoyment has been the heaven that has made light the sternest tasks, and the moment's relaxation has caused "the springs of effort" to adjust themselves with a tenser resolution. It seems very clear that God would have us a joyful people, and yet by our very selves the right to be so is challenged at every turn. As was recently well said:

"The Weeping Philosopher and his laughing twin brother wage continual warfare in the heart of every normal man; for the landscape of life is alternately irradiated by the sunshine of hope and darkened by the clouds of despair. The golden mean of thought and feeling is the ideal thing, and, like all other ideals, is ever just beyond the reach of creatures of flesh and blood. True happiness is never attained by conscious effort. As Carlyle well says, 'Blessed is the healthy nature; it is the coherent, sweetly co-operative, not incoherent, self-destructive one.' 'Certain races have a genuine for holding in entail that exhaustless wealth of the spirit which knows no limitations of time and place, while other breeds of men take their pleasures sadly,' in despite of their utmost effort so to be glad. The Greek laid his head upon nature's bosom, and told of his boundless contentment in a language which has defied the corroding tooth of time. The Roman found his scope in work which never touches the heart, although it appeals with irresistible force to the intellect of the successive generations. It has been given to no nation to perfectly blend the Hellenic aestheticism with the Roman capacity for affairs, although the French, at the supreme moments of their eventful history, have almost touched the shining

I am
Only a little boy.
And it don't
Make any difference
If my name is
Wesley Wilberforce Whitefield Wilkins,
And my sister's bean
Says if I don't watch out
It'll get tangled up in my feet
And throw me over the fence,
I've got some rights
That Paw and Maw
And the rest of the family push
Is bound to respect,
'Cause I didn't name myself,
Or I never would 'a tore
It off by the yard like that.
And when we had buckwheat cakes
And company for supper
The other evening,
And I took a bunch on my plate—
Buckwheat cakes, I mean—
When I had some already,
'Cause a little boy's eyes
Is bigger than his stomach,
And Maw looked at my pile
And said I'd have to eat
Every bit of it
Or be whipped
For manners;
And I was chuck full
And hadn't room for a taste
Without sneezing.
And I reached over and whispered to Paw,
So the company couldn't hear.
And I said to Paw,
Which would you do if you was me,
Bust
Or take a lickin'?

And he kind of peeked up at Ma,
And he says to me,

goal.
It is the inherited tastes and prejudices of Cavalier and Puritan still at war, within us, that forces us to take "our pleasures sadly." Until these great forces are more perfectly blended we are apt to go too far either way. There is a happy mean that can be attained, and it may be the twentieth century is to give us that equipoise so necessary to adjust life as it should be. But in the meantime let us not crowd all play out of our lives in the mad race after wealth, power, culture, or whatever it may be, for we are all more or less busy in this age of colossal schemes, and what avail will it all be when attained without the power to enjoy. Thomas Carlyle says: "Efforts, to be permanently useful, must be uniformly joyous." A perfect amalgamation of the joyous and the practical is necessary.

Paducah is known as a town that is pre-eminently commercial. We are busy about many things here—and not as busy, perhaps, as we should be about other things, but the coming week is to be her gala week, and let her throw off care as far as possible, and seek to make the stranger within our gate glad that he is here. Carnival times are proverbially joyous occasions, so let us seek to get the best there is out of this holiday of ours.

Every time is a time of opportunity, a time of some good, and a time to learn something. This is the time to cultivate the capacity for play, to be joyous and to make others happy. We will settle back to hum-drum task-work all the stronger for the brief play-time. And the people who are coming to visit us will find us more agreeable if we are not too busy to be merry; for

"Laugh, and the world laughs with you;
Weep, and you weep alone;
For the sad old earth must borrow its mirth,
But has trouble enough of its own.

Sing, and the hills will answer;
Sigh, it is lost in the air;
The echoes bound to a joyful sound,
But shrink from voicing care.

"Rejoice, and men will cheer you;
Grieve, and they turn and go;
They want full measure of all your joy,

But they do not need your woe.

Be glad, and your friends are many;
Be sad, and you lose them all—
There are none to decline your need-
ward wall,
But alone you must drink life's gall.

"Feast, and your halls are crowded;
Fast, and the world goes by,
Succeed and give, and it helps you live,
But no man can help you die.

There is room in the halls of pleasure
For a large and lonely train,
But one by one we must all file on
Through the narrow aisles of pain."

THE FAVORITE GIRL.
SHE
is the girl who is not "too bright and too good" to be able to find joy and pleasure all over the world.

SHE
is the girl who appreciates the fact that she cannot always have the first choice of everything in the world, says Woman's Life.

SHE
is the girl who is not aggressive and does not find joy in inciting aggressive people.

SHE
is the girl who has tact enough not to say the very thing that will cause the skeleton in her friend's closet to rattle his bones.

SHE
is the girl who, whether it is warm or cold, clear or stormy, finds no fault with the weather.

SHE
is the girl who, when you invite her to any place, compliments you by looking her best.

SHE
is the girl who makes this world a pleasant place because she is so pleasant herself.

And, by the by, when you come to think of it, isn't she the girl who makes you feel she likes you, and therefore you like her?

Real Economy: Mrs. Newlied— "The idea! He says I'm extravagant." "Her Mother—"Well, dear, perhaps you're not as economical as you might be." Mrs. Newlied—"O! but I am. Why, I never buy a blessed thing but I bargain!"—Philadelphia Press.
